Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Habeas Corpus: A Response to Mr. Binney The vindication of the President s side of this subject has at length fallen into the hands of most unquestionable legal ability. The venerable and eminent Horace Binney has published a carefully prepared pamphlet of fifty-eight pages in vindication of the President s right to suspend, or of his right to disregard the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. In doing this, he is not merely personally discourteous towards Judge Taney, but quite free in imputation upon the character of Madison and the Congress of 92. He also imputes to those men of great acuteness who deny this right the biased influence of their political opinions in favor of democracy, and an acquired prejudice against Presidential power, because it carries power in that direction which is against the gulf stream of legislative authority, the great channel of the popular will of the moment. After such free invitation by example, he will neither be surprised or offended if his readers recollect or notice his frank showing of his own politics as some explanation of his own novel and most peculiar opinion. The pamphlet leaves no need for relying on popular imputation, that he is of that old school of ultra Federalists who looked upon Alexander Hamilton, if not with perfect reverence, at least with implicit confidence in his political infallibility. This, too, in despite his known predilections for the English Constitution as the very best that ever was or could be made; - and despite his attempt in Convention to give us in addition to a Senate for life, a President for life, with an absolute veto on...
