On this supposition, the prism gives no information whether the material of the coma is solid, liquid, or gaseous. Terrestrial phenomena suggest a condition similar to fog or cloud. If the luminous gas of the nucleus suffers condensation and subsequent diffusion to form the tails of comets, it must pass through a condition in which it neither emits nor in any large degree reflects light. Dark spaces are frequently seen between the envelopes of comets. The observations in full, of which the results are given in this Report, have been communicated recently in two papers to the Royal Society. Mr. Birt continues his observations on the Moon s surface at Hartwell and London, as mentioned in the last Report. During the past year four forms have been issued by the Lunar Committee of the British Association for the advancement of Science, viz. No. 1 for the reception of general observation of the Moon s surface; No. 2, a Table of areas for assisting in symbolizing objects; No. 3, for recording numerical and other data, appertaining to each object symbolised; and No. 4, for aiding in the computation of positions of the second order. These forms are found to be very useful, and by means of them nearly 800 objects have been symbolized and entered, and are now in progress of being inserted in an outline map of 100 inches to the Moon s diameter, on which the co-ordinates of each point determined by...
